FRESNO, CA — Fresno Chaffee Zoo's newest babies are making their habitat debuts!

The female Masai giraffe calf born on Tuesday, August 18th has begun exploring her habitat in African Adventure. Named Sienna in reference to the unique color shade of her fur when she was born, she has settled in well with the rest of the Zoo's giraffe herd. She has taken after her mom, Siku, in being very observant and perceptive of the world around her.

Winston, the male Malayan tapir calf born on Saturday, July 11th, has also been getting acquainted with his habitat in Kingdoms of Asia. Winston tends to stick close to mom, Ulan, but has gotten more adventurous as he grows more confident. The pair can be seen swimming in their grotto, munching on leaves, and taking naps in the sunshine.

Both babies will continue to explore their new spaces, with best viewing opportunities in the morning. They may not be visible to the public every day, as they will continue to choose if they'd like to go on habitat or stay behind the scenes. Guests can continue to receive updates on all the newest arrivals via the Zoo's social media channels. If the public would like to show their support for the babies at the Zoo, virtual adoptions are available on the Zoo's website fcz.org or at the following link: <https://fcz.org/zooborns/>
